

Maltezis Kyriakos (1973, Greece) graduated from the Medical School (University of Athens) in 1999. He specialised in General Practice in the General Hospital Sant Panteleimon in Piraeus, Greece from 2003 to 2007. He is working in the public sector as a General Practitioner (National Health System) since 2007. He is in the final year (thesis) in a Master in Family Medicine and Science Methodology in Primary Health Care that is operated in the Faculty of Medicine University of Crete. He followed a one year programme in emergency medicine of a total of 700 hours. He has also graduated a one year course in infections diseases organized by the Greek National Association of Infections Diseases. He was specialised in several schools organized by ELEGEIA (authorized Greek Association of General Practitioners) in smoking cessation programmes, diabetes melitus, COPD, depression, 'training the trainers' etc. He is EURACT member since 2009. He is author in original papers published in international journals and papers in Greek Journals. Further papers has been accepted but not published yet and others are in progress. He participated as an author in oral and poster presentations in national and international congresses and in the writing of chapters in books regarding general practice. He gives lectures in undergraduate courses for students in the Faculty of Medicine, University of Athens relevant to medical physiology and general practice. He also participates as a volunteer in international missions in Africa since 2005 which main purpose is to provide primary care services in Uganda and Tanzania residents. He received an honorary award by the National Blood Donor Organization for his volunteer participation for four years in organising missions as a doctor for blood collections in district areas all over Greece.